IF ONE LIVED LONG ENOUGH.

If you and I could live two hundred years or so, Perhaps our cherished ills we'd manage to outgrow.

We might cultivate, the while, An ingratiating smile; For a scowl would surely bore us, With two centuries before us.

Perhaps we'd be less critical if quite assured that we Could still cavort around here in two-thousand-nine A. D.;

We might try to make amends To our irritating friends, We could treat their faults with levity, When we thought of our longevity.

When we'd grown philosophical and bald and free from care, We'd have of sorrow even less than we should have of hair.

So we all could do our parts To give peace to grieving hearts. As things are supposed we try it—We'd be sure to profit by it.

'Tis said the compound int'rest on a single dollar would, In twenty generations, put us millions to the good!

I should like to start out now, With a dollar, anyhow, But I don't know how to collar That first, fundamental dollar.

EASTER IN TALLAHASSEE.

Some of the Things of Interest that Transpired in the Capital City.

Easter Sunday dawned with cloudless skies and a warmer temperature than that of the previous day, and, in consequence, the number of early communicants in the churches was unusually large. The midday services, also, were well attended, and the subjects chosen for song and sermon were especially suited to the Easter tide. The choirs of the several churches furnished beautiful and elaborate musical programs, the decoration committees made the interior of the churches bowers of bloom.

Among the memorial designs placed in St. John's Episcopal church; was a large wreath of white roses, hung on the altar in loving memory of the late rector, Dr. W. H. Carter, who for nearly thirty years ministered to the congregation of that church.

In the afternoon the children of St. John's had their usual Easter song service, and the seven-foot cross, standing in the chancel and covered with their floral offerings, testified to the large number of little ones who participated in this pretty custom.

Sunday night the children of Trinity Methodist had their Easter service, and it was greatly enjoyed by a large congregation of both young and old.

In the afternoon at 8 o'clock a special service in the interest of the temperance cause was held in the Baptist church. Several addresses were made by members of the legislature and other persons present, and much interest was manifested in this subject which has already become one of the main issues to be considered by the present body of Florida's lawmakers.

The vesper service at the State College for Women was, as is usual, attended by a far larger crowd than could be accommodated. Long before the opening hour, chapel, halls and stairways were filled with visitors anxious to hear the exquisite music always rendered upon these occasions, and dozens more stood outside at the chapel windows. One of the numbers on the program especially pleasing to the audience was a solo given by Mrs. Fred H. Hudson, of Miami, whose magnificent contralto voice is always in such demand when Mrs. Hudson visits Tallahassee.
